We must then insert the four gospels-, the ais of the apostles; St. c Pauls epistles; St. Johns ist epistle, and the M i st epistle of St. Peter; lastly, we may, if we will, add the revelations oi St. John: However, I shall omit the opinion which the antients had of them, but shall mention that article in its proper place. These books are unanimously receivd; and here follows such as are doubted of by some, c and receivxl as genuine by others. The epistle which is ascribd. to St. James; that of St. Jude; the second of St. Peter; the second and third of St. John: In fine, continues Eusebius, we must pronounce the following absolutely spurious; viz. the aits of St. Paul; the book of the pajlor; the revelations of St. Peter; the epistle of St. Barnabas, and the institutions of the aposties: To which we may, in case it be t thought proper, add the revelations of St. John, which are rejected by some as spurious, and received by others as genuine. It would have been impossible for Eusebius to have expressd himself more clearly on this occasion, who in another place conjectures that the revelations were written by S. John sirnamd the Priest. Tis indeed true that the Arians quote it in the...
