Because ozone absorbs strongly in the UV-B (280-320 nm) portion of the solar spectrum and because UV-B radiation is known to be injurious to life, it is important to assess the biological consequences of enhanced UV-B radiation resulting from stratospheric ozone depletion. In order to inform and educate the scientific community about Antarctic UV research, the National Science Foundations Division of Polar Programs and the United States Environmental Protection Agency's Environmental Research Laboratory in Corvallis, Oregon co-sponsored a workshop on ultraviolet radiation and biological research in Antarctica. The workshop was held in Washington, D.C. on June 7-8, 1988. The goals of the workshop were to: provide an overview of UV-B effects on organisms and UV radiation measurements for individuals interested in conducting research on the consequences of enhanced UV-B radiation for Antarctic organisms and personnel: describe...
