Excerpt: . . . those who got over it were so weakened and disabled, that they were in no condition to do any the least service, nor were thoroughly restored till after they had been some months in their winter-quarters. Never had the Russian army lost so ss many horses and oxen: this went so far, that though they had taken with them some hundreds of supernumeraries of those creatures, for a change in the service of the artillery, they had not, towards the end of the campaign, enough of them for the draught; for want of which, they were obliged to bury in the deserts a great part of their bomb-shells and cannon-balls. A great quantity of them was also left with the carriages in Poland, . which the train of artillery, and a part of the army, had crossed. The forages in the steps, beginning to fall...
